This program aims to enhance intercultural and global health competencies among teaching staff in health and related disciplines, equipping them to effectively address the health needs of culturally diverse and displaced populations, including those affected by migration.

Specific objectives:

- Discuss key concepts of interculturality;
- Explore theoretical foundations and instruments related to interculturality;
- Understand intercultural challenges in health within a globalized world;
- Develop strategies for culturally competent care in emergency and transnational contexts;
- Foster collaborative networks in global and humanitarian health.

Only for Staff from Universities, not students
